

SOCIETY and PERSONAL ACTIVITIES of WOMEN

SOCIETY

Mrs. G. E. Julian, 204 E. Navarre, entertained the members of the As You Like It club Monday evening at a 6:30 o'clock dinner. The attractive table, at which 16 members were seated, was centered with a basket of poinsettias and flowers. After the dinner an impromptu musical program was given. The program of the evening was opened with an impromptu musical hour, after which Nye's History of England, was discussed by Miss Emma Stevenson. The current events were given by Miss Addie Reade, Mrs. Francis Hedger and Miss Maude Heath. The program of the evening was in charge of Miss Margaret Post, and was preceded by a short business session. On Jan. 23, Mrs. O. E. Julian will again be hostess to the club at an evening meeting. At that time Miss Anna Standfield will be in charge of the program.

The Misses Mary and Hazel Calvert, 1021 W. Washington, entertained Monday evening the members of the Queen Esther Circle of St. Paul's Memorial Methodist Episcopal church. After a short business meeting an impromptu musical program was given. The remainder of the evening was spent socially and at a buffet luncheon was served from an attractive table centered with a crystal vase of pink roses. On Feb. 6, the Circle will be entertained at the home of Miss Margaret Miller, 314 Blaine av., in the evening.

"Furnishing the Home," was the topic discussed at the Progress Club Monday afternoon before the members of the Art Department. Suitable furnishings for different rooms were described by Mrs. A. E. Jones and a variety of chairs, illustrating the different types of furniture and upholstery as well as the different kinds of wood and finishes were displayed. Mrs. A. E. Jones gave an interesting talk on "Ideal Kitchen Furnishings." The next meeting of the Art Department will take place Jan. 22.

Miss Mable Trager, 714 Oak st., assisted by Miss Desie Turnball, entertained the members of the Philadelphia class of Westminster church Monday evening. After a brief business session, the evening was spent socially and a buffet luncheon was served to 21 members from an attractive table centered with white chrysanthemums. The next meeting will be held Jan. 23, the place to be announced later. The class will attend the union Philathea meeting next Friday evening at the First Christian church.

The Lincoln Literary club met Monday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Vern Van Dusen, 1123 Blaine av. At the business session, Mrs. T. H. Jackson was re-elected president; Mrs. C. A. Pitcher, secretary; and Mrs. Edward Vogt, treasurer. Mrs. Van Dusen was elected vice-president. A sketch of the life of Gene Stratton-Porter was given by Mrs. E. J. Suddarth while Mrs. R. Armstrong had charge of the current events. Mrs. George Entenline led the nature study hour. The remainder of the afternoon was spent socially and light refreshments were served. On Jan. 23, Mrs. C. A. Pitcher, 528 N. Cushing st., will entertain the club at a 1 o'clock luncheon.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Adelberger, 511 E. Corby st., entertained their church club at a 6:30 o'clock dinner Sunday evening. A basket of poinsettias formed the centerpiece of the attractive table.

Revelations of A Wife

by Dicky's face when I came out of the telephone booth I knew that he had overheard my reference to Dr. Pettit. I do not think a single vestige of his old jealousy of the physician remains, but his detestation of him is so great that he hates me to have any association with him whatever.

"What's the big idea?" he growled. "Why have that first cousin to a chimpanzee take you over to the hospital? Or—" with a sudden change of inflection as he grasped the possibility behind the question—arrangement—"is Marion worse?"

"No, Marion's very much better," I answered, walking swiftly out of the drug store for though Dicky had spoken in a low tone as to his custom in a public place, no matter what his irritation, I did not care to continue the discussion there. "Let us get in the car and I'll tell you about it."

He followed me, and said quickly, as I lowered the emergency brake and put my foot upon the clutch: "Drive around the turnpike through Sag Harbor," he said. "I want to get my mail."

I repressed a little irritated exclamation as I obeyed his suggestion. If he had told me that he wanted to go for the mail I could have telephoned from Sag Harbor and have saved the trip to Bridgehampton. At any other time I would have welcomed the longer trip, for I am always delighted to drive, but I had so many things to do on this day that I dreaded any interruption.

Dicky is pessimistic.

But I am sure there was no trace of my feelings as I related to Dicky just what Miss Jones had said. His face was grave when I had finished. "You're right about Sawbones, at that," he said. "If I did need one, I should need you pronto. Poor old girl! She's been putting the most tremendous strain on her faculties ever since I've known her, carrying her own troubles and those of the world and his wife besides. I told you I was afraid of a tremendous smash there some day. If only Robert Savarin had stayed where he belonged, on a granite pedestal up in the Catskills, she might have postponed the evil day, but as it is—she shrugged his shoulders in the Gallic way which he acquired years ago, and his youthful affected days, a little mannerism which I hope he never will drop, for in him it is most attractive, at least to me.

"You think then, Dicky," my voice was filled with the terror I felt at any thought of Lillian ill, "that Robert's presence is affecting her so much?"

"Not his presence so much as the plea Marion and he are no doubt putting up between them that she ditched old Harry and married beloved Dicky."

For the letter was in the well-known chirography of Marsden, the art editor who had asked Dicky to illustrate the Pennington book, for which he had wished to have Grace Draper as model.

HOME-MAKING HELPS

"Everything About the House Helps to Make the Home"

By WANDA BARTON

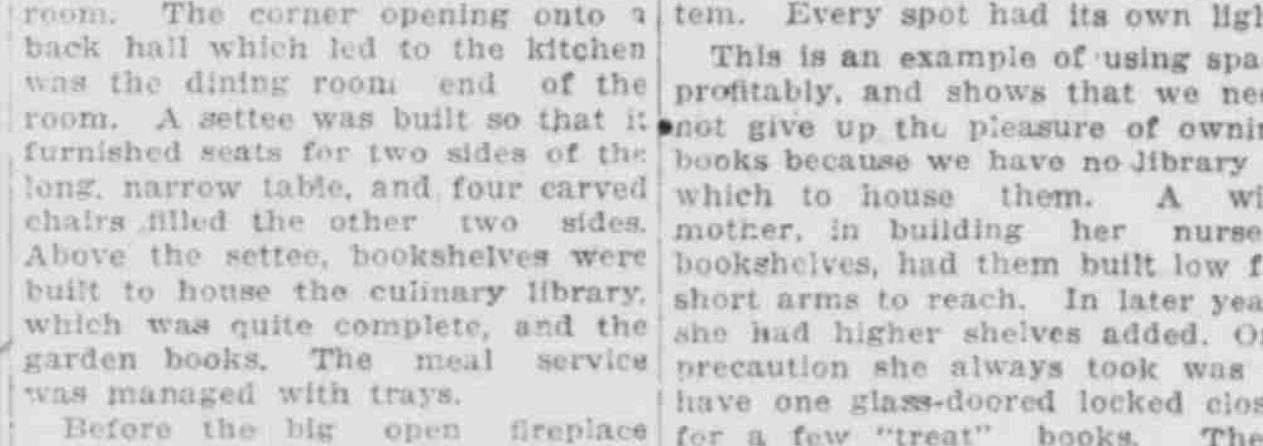

DO YOU KEEP YOUR FAVORITE BOOKS ALWAYS WITHIN REACH?

In the majority of homes where there is no room designated as the "library," books are tucked away in odd corners where they are not "get-at-able," and they are not freely accumulated, because there is no place to keep them. This is deplorable, for books are our dearest companions. The only remedy is to make places in which to keep our books if cases have not been provided.

A real book-lover altered an old-fashioned house in a most attractive manner by throwing four small rooms into one big living-room. This room had to answer as combination parlor, library, living-room, and in late fall and winter, as a dining room. In summer, early and late, the big porch was the dining-room. The corner opening onto a back hall which led to the kitchen was the dining room end of the room. A settee was built so that it furnished seats for two sides of the long, narrow table, and four carved chairs filled the other two sides. Above the settee, bookshelves were built to house the culinary library, which was quite complete, and the garden books. The meal service was managed with trays.

UNCLE WIGGILY

THE STORY OF THE RED INK.

By HOWARD R. GARIS.

There was a single ball outside the hollow stump bungalow of Uncle Wiggily the bunny rabbit. Susie Littletail, the rabbit girl, who had come over to bring to Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy a thimble full of sugar that Mrs. Littletail had borrowed the year before, ran to the window.

"Oh, maybe it's Santa Claus!" cried Susie, her nose all twinkling and shimmering in her excitement. "Why, Santa Claus has been here and gone, Susie!" said Uncle Wiggily. "They can't be his jingle bells."

"No, they're on Munchie Trot, the pony boy," said Susie. "He's giving his sister Dottie a ride on his Christmas sled. Oh, look how fast he goes! See, Uncle Wiggily, hurry or you'll miss him!"

Uncle Wiggily hopped to the window. Truly enough Munchie Trot, the pony chap, was galloping past, his feet flinging a shower of snow all about, his head held high and around him was a string of jingling bells. How fast Munchie ran!

"I wish I could have a ride like that!" sighed Susie, the rabbit girl. "Well, I can't run as fast or as far as Munchie Trot," said Uncle Wiggily, "but I'll give you a ride on your sled if you like, Susie."

Susie did like, very much, and soon she was all bundled up in her fur coat, sitting on her sled, while Uncle Wiggily took hold of the rope in his paws and started off, pulling the rabbit girl.

"Munchie Trot runs past the way again, Nurse Jane," spoke the bunny gentleman, turning back a moment before starting on a joy trip with Susie, "just give him a sugar cookie, and his sister Dottie one also."

"I will," said Nurse Jane. "But Munchie is such a fast little pony I hardly think he will stop here." "He may," said Uncle Wiggily. Then away he went with Susie. Of course, the bunny gentleman was not a rabbit, but still he pulled a sled pretty well, and Susie was having a fine time when, all at once, something happened.

Out from behind a stump sprang the bad old Fuzzy Fox. He gave a bark like a cross dog and then, with a push of his paw, he showed a fine time when, all at once, something happened.

Uncle Wiggily back on the sled with Susie. "Now I'll ride you both off to my den, and there I'll keep you until I nibble all your ears!" howled the Fox.

Before Uncle Wiggily could get up the sled, or do anything to help Susie, the Fox caught the rope in his teeth, and away he ran over the drifts of snow, pulling the bunny gentleman and little girl on the sled after him.

The Fox went like the wind, faster even than Munchie Trot, and so swiftly did he pull the sled that Uncle Wiggily was afraid to jump on and pull Susie after him.

Paster and faster and faster trotted the Fuzzy Fox, pulling the two bunnies on the sled after him. The wind whistled on Uncle Wiggily's pink nose and made tears come into his eyes. As for Baby Buntie she tried to scream, but the wind took away her breath.

"My! This is fast riding!" thought Uncle Wiggily. "It's faster than ever Munchie Trot could run," thought Susie. The Fuzzy Fox looked back to see if they were both on the sled.

"Oh, what fine ear-nibbling I shall have!" he howled. On and on he ran, and he was now so far from Uncle Wiggily's hollow stump bungalow that the bunny thought he would never see it.

"This is my lucky day!" howled the Fox, turning once again to see if Uncle Wiggily and Susie were on the sled. And then the Fox happened to come to a deep drift, and not seeing it because he had his head turned into the deep drift he ran, head over heels, and was soon lost to sight, away down in the snow.

His paw slipped off the rope, so he didn't pull the sled in the hole after him. It stayed outside with Uncle Wiggily and Susie Littletail on it. But they were in a sad plight. "How are we ever going to get home?" sobbed Susie.

"We are far away, but maybe I can hop back there and pull you," said the rabbit gentleman. He got off the sled, and taking the rope began to pull. And then there was a scrambling in the snow drift, and Susie cried:

"Oh, the Fox is coming out! Hurry, Uncle Wiggily!" "Alas, I can not hurry! I can not run like the wind!" sighed the rabbit.

"No, but I can!" cried a jolly voice, and then, with a jingle of bells, up trotted Munchie, the pony boy. "I stopped at your house," he said to Uncle Wiggily. "Nurse Jane gave me a sugar cookie and told me you have come for a ride. I followed the sled tracks in the snow and here I find you."

"Quick! You must save us from the Fox. He is coming out of the drift!" cried Susie. Then Munchie took the rope over his strong shoulders, and pulled the sled with Uncle Wiggily and Susie sitting on it. And Munchie ran so fast that he got away from the Fox, whose eyes were filled with snow. Tus, after all, Susie had a ride behind Munchie, the pony. And a fine, fast ride it was, too.

Safe to the bungalow the pony boy brought the bunny gentleman and little girl. As for the Fox, he was so angry that he ate a snowball. And if the tea kettle doesn't boil over on the gas stove and scare the hands of the clock so they can't hold themselves in front of the face, I'll tell you next about Uncle Wiggily and the crying wolf.

STATE CAMPAIGN

Coolidge Will Speak at Indianapolis Session of Editors on Jan. 27.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 9.—The republican campaign in Indiana will be auspiciously opened by Calvin Coolidge, vice-president of the United States, Jan. 27.

Coolidge's advent into the Indiana arena reveals the great importance which national political leaders attach to the outcome of congressional elections in this state. In the city election last November, the democrats regained some of the ground they lost in the avalanche which swept Harding into the White House.

The republicans want to overcome the results of the city elections and that is one reason why the vice-president is coming west to address the love-feast of Indiana Republican Editorial association.

Old Guard republicans are uncertain as to whether Albert J. Beveridge, former senator from Indiana and one time leading progressive, will enter the race against Sen. Harry S. New who seeks re-election at the polls next fall. Coolidge is of the old guard and this adds significance to his visit. The stand-patters desire to see Sen. New re-elected.

New And Watson, Speakers. New and Sen. Watson and other prominent republican leaders will also address the editorial meeting. Gov. McCray and Mrs. Daisy Douglas Barr of New Castle, will also be there. E. J. Hancock, president of the association, will preside at the meeting.

"We are exceedingly fortunate to have Vice-President Coolidge as guest of Indiana republicans," Frederick E. Schortemeier, secretary of the republican state committee, said today. "It will be the first appearance of Mr. Coolidge in Indiana. We mean to start the campaign with a bang."
